Medical center names Thomas Scardaville VP of strategic planning and marketing

Thomas Scardaville

Thomas Scardaville has been appointed vice president of strategic planning and marketing at Southwest Washington Medical Center. "Scardaville is charged with energizing SWMC's ongoing strategic planning process and will work to enhance SWMC's public image, while building stronger relationships with key organizations and individuals in our community," says medical center president and CEO Joe Kortum. He will also assess industry trends, analyze cross-divisional systems and look for new business opportunities, according to Kortum.

A Wharton Business School graduate with over 25 years of management experience, Scardaville most recently was senior vice president for business development and marketing for Aurora Healthcare System, a $2 billion regional healthcare system in Milwaukee, Wis.

The medical center is moving ahead with a $123 million expansion at the Mill Plain campus to boost patient room and surgery capacity.

Restaurateur and a founder of St. Joseph Catholic Parish, Emmet Onslow died at 90
