City may open Esther Short Park to food vendors during the week

Depending on the interest shown, the city may allow food vendors to operate in Esther Short Park during weekdays, according to Vancouver program and events coordinator Judi Bailey.

Bailey says the city is also seeking food vendors to provide wares at six noon concerts and six evening Six-to-Sunset Concerts in the park.

Bailey says up to three vendors could be selected to sell food during the week in the park and as many as five for the evening concerts.

A food vendors meeting will be held at 2 p.m. Wednesday, June 25, in the Slocum House, 605 Esther Street. For further information, call Bailey at 696-8478.

Auditor's office gives county Clean Water Program bill of health

Clark County auditor Greg Kimsey stopped short of giving the county Clean Water Program a clean bill of health as a result of a performance audit just concluded.

Kimsey said he was pleased that the program is improving monitoring processes and is developing outcome-based performance measures. But he concluded, "Unfortunately, we found that while operational data is collected, program managers have not been able to present this in a manner which demonstrates the results of their work, and a formal capital facilities plan has not been adopted."

Campaign workshop focuses on winning
