Is it a bird? Is It Superman?, no it's a plane

Watchers and listeners at today's noon concert in Esther Short Park got occasional interruptions from the air lanes from both commercial and military flights out of Portland International Airport.

Despite the outside interference hundreds of concert goers saw, listened to and applauded Portland singer Stephanie Schneiderman as she belted out a range of songs from blues to jazz from the park's main stage.

And, Wednesday for the first time for a park concert, the public parking space beneath Vancouvercenter was open. Rates are 50 cents an hour.

The parking structure will be open from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily except weekends until the first apartment units in the center are occupied in August. Public parking will then be offered on weekends as well.

C-TRAN probing peoples' minds on mass transit

C-TRAN, developing a plan to carry the transit agency through the next 20 years, convenes an open house at 5 p.m. Thursday, July 17, to ask probing questions.

The session in the James Parsley Center, 2901 Falk Road, will seek answers from the point of view of the citizen.

Questions being asked include the following:

Why is public transportation important to you?

What value does public transportation bring to the community?

Where should service be located?

What types of service, how much, and how often?

For further information, call Scott Patterson, 696-4494.
