Clark College asking state for $30 million to create an east Vancouver satellite campus

Following through with a 2001 proposal to create an east Vancouver Clark College campus, Clark's president, Wayne Branch, yesterday announced the community college is requesting $30.5 million from the state to build a 68,542-square foot campus in the Columbia Tech Center development east of 164th Avenue.

The funding request was sent to the state Board for Technical and Community Colleges.

The Clark College Foundation has agreed to buy 9.5 acres for the campus at a cost of $1.4 million.

The satellite campus would house just over a thousand full-time students and would play a more significant role in local workforce training and economic development, according to Branch.

Leadership Clark County taking applications

Applications are being accepted by Leadership Clark County for the 12th course of study, which runs from September 2004 to June 2005.

The enrollment deadline is April 30. Approximately 35 students will be accepted. The course is open to individuals who work or live in Southwest Washington and the Portland metropolitan area, according to Keith Culp, executive director.

Nearly 300 persons have been graduated from the ten-month course of study that helps prepare students for leadership positions in making Clark County a better community.

For further information, call Culp at 567-1085.
