

Carly Fiorina says HP printing products are dreamed up and designed in Vancouver

Carly Fiorina today told one of Vancouver's largest business audiences that Hewlett-Packard, celebrating its first 25 years in Vancouver, will stay on to celebrate a second 25 years.

HP's imaging and printing products have "dreamed up and designed in Vancouver" stamped all over them, Fiorina, chair and CEO of the 11th largest company in the U.S., said at a Greater Vancouver Chamber of Commerce, Columbia River Economic Development Council, Identity Clark County luncheon at the Red Lion Hotel at the Quay.

The Vancouver HP operations is Clark County's largest private employer with over 2,000 employees. These are the people who invent the company's imaging and printing products.

Fiorina told her audience that the true age of technology is just beginning. "The dotcom boom and dotcom bust were the end of the beginning. Technology is moving from the physical and the analog to the digital, the mobile and the virtual."

HP, an $80 billion company, will grow by $7 billion this year. Of that, $2 billion in growth will come from the products that get their start in Vancouver.

"One million HP printers are sold every week," Fiorina said. "Every second worldwide someone buys an HP printer."

She clearly has bragging rights, but Fiorina came not praise HP but to remind southern Washington's business community that, in addition to entering a new era of technology, "this is a new era of business leadership."

"Community development is not separate from business planning but is an objective," Fiorina declared. "Social values have to be enhanced."

Fiorina said that today only 10 percent of the world's population can afford the products that HP produces. "We have to work to make it possible for the other 90 percent to buy our products in the future," she said.

According to Fiorina, business people have to have the capability, the character, and the ability to collaborate so that technology can bring about the transformation to a better life.

"HP products are the sales leaders in every category that we make," Fiorina said. "We believe if we aren't leading, we are losing."

Life-saving awards being presented by Vancouver Fire Department this evening

Six citizens will be honored by the Vancouver Fire Department in an awards ceremony at 6:30 p.m. this evening in the Water Resources Education Center. In addition, several firefighters and fire companies will be given awards.

Being presented life-saving awards are John Hallman and Mike Spence, tow truck operators, and Jani Chaney, Dawn Floyd, Kelly Sharp, and Rita Fisher, members of the Clark County Emergency Services 9-1-1 staff, all of six of whom helped prevent loss of life when a bridge on the Evergreen Highway collapsed earlier this year.

Survey showing support for community arts center will be detailed Wednesday

A status report to the community by the Center for the Arts at 4 p.m. Wednesday, June 23, in City Hall will show public support for a Southwest Washington Center for the Arts, according to Center for the Arts co-chair Val Ogden.

A recent public survey, as well as information collected from arts providers that are part of the feasibility study being sponsored by the Center for the Arts and the Vancouver Cultural Commission, will be discussed at the meeting.

European bicycle transportation is subject of display in the Public Service Center Friday

A display of European bicycle transportation design will be shown 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. Friday, June 25, on the sixth floor of the Public Service Center, 1300 Franklin Street.

The display is sponsored by Vancouver Transportation Services and is part of the Vancouver-Portland Pedal Palooza, which encourages bicycle transportation.
