

Greg McGreevey gets Marshall Award

Greg McGreevey

Greg McGreevey, 32-year-old community activist and sales professional, has been named winner of the Gen. George C. Marshall Public Leadership Award for 2005.

McGreevey is the founder and executive director of the Fruit Valley Association. He is cited for having recognized a need while serving as an elder in the Fruit Valley Neighborhood's Rivers Edge Church. He was nominated by Debra Elliott, principal of the Fruit Valley Community Learning Center

The Fruit Valley Foundation helps the neighborhood's working poor families meet basic needs by supporting a food bank and clothing closet, as well as contributing to a program that supplies weekend nutrition to low-income students of Fruit Valley Elementary School.

"Greg's accomplishments thus far have established him as a quiet leader who is guided by his own sense of decency, not unlike Marshall, who received, but never sought public acclaim," said Dan Tonkovich, chair of the seven-member Marshall Award selection committee.

McGreevey is an account manager for Hexion Specialty Chemicals, where he is part of a management team responsible for nine manufacturing sites. McGreevey is a graduate of the University of Washington. He and his wife, Laura, and their 10-month-old son live in the Lincoln Neighborhood.

In its 17th year, the award, presented by the Bank of Clark County, is awarded to a Clark County resident, 35 years old or younger, who has completed a four-year college degree and who has demonstrated leadership and commitment to public service.

The award will be presented by Mayor Royce Pollard in a 4 p.m. ceremony, Wednesday, Nov. 2, in Marshall's former home, the Marshall House, 1301 Officers Row.
